Thought for the month

I was stopped at a red light the other day, and the car in front of me had a bumper sticker that caught my attention, and occupied my thoughts even after the light turned green. It read, "Peace on earth will come when we decide that the power of love is more valuable than the love of power."

That sentence stuck with me. It's simple and it's true. And yet, it is so hard to accomplish. We are taught this concept from childhood – "Love thy neighbour", "Turn the other cheek" to name just two examples that everyone knows. Tolerance and love are something we grow up learning about and believing in as a concept. And yet, it ends up being easier to follow the basic nature of all creatures – to protect ourselves, to (figuratively) hoard that which we have against a time of famine, to distrust the stranger. We are wired to win, to do what's necessary to stay alive. These instincts are primal. They work against what we know is right and true. It seems difficult, perhaps impossible, to rise above the instincts – especially as they are mostly subconscious.

And yet, it must be possible. As the bumper sticker suggested, we have to decide what is more valuable. It doesn't come naturally, but it is a choice we can make. And the more we allow our consciousness to evolve, the closer we can get to making that choice.

Imagine a world where the power of love is more important than the love of power. We might actually achieve peace on earth if we can turn that imagination into reality. It may seem insurmountable, but every journey does start with a single step.

Lent message from The Rev'd Norma Fergusson

By the time you read this – Lent will have already begun and you may even be regretting the impulse to give up gin or biscuits or whatever will form your Lenten discipline this year. Or you may not even have started – because too often the language of Lent is the language of failure and that is not helpful to us or to God. And the whole purpose of Lent is to prepare us to welcome the risen Christ on Easter morning – which we can't do if we've just been grumpy for the previous 40 days! So, here are some ideas for observing Lent differently:

Doing something kind for someone every day (that can include yourself!)

Sorting through books and clothes and taking the things you don't want to a charity shop,

Writing letters or telephoning instead of sending emails and texts,

Going for a walk and praying or giving thanks for the people and things you see around you , Reading Mark's Gospel, Listening to Bach.

Whatever you choose to do, I wish you a happy and a holy Lent

Country Matters

The book “Wilding” by Isabella Tree (2018) is the story of her and her husband’s large High Weald’s Knepp Castle estate in Sussex’s exit from farming in favour of a brave leap into the unknown, replacing it with a fenced- in return to the “jungle” with some grazing semi-wild livestock. Nightingales, turtle doves and purple emperor butterflies, all red listed species, are increasing. People are asking me “Can this be more widely replicated”? Even the “Archers” have worked in a story line!

This January in north Yorkshire I detoured to view Rievaulx Abbey, a vast, impressive Cistercian monastery dating from the 13th century. Those monks would have lived alongside wolves, bears and eagles but I learnt that they survived on a largely vegetarian diet. Recently a wolf has been spotted in the French Dordogne, having crossed from the Italian Appennines.

There is a proposal to reintroduce wolves into Scotland to control red deer numbers and assist forestry regeneration. Beavers have been introduced to a compound in Devon to aid river management and one has escaped.

I have seen Bear poo in the Slovakian Tatra mountains and a few are said to survive in the Pyrenees. Red Kites and Ravens are now common here. Great bustards are gaining a foothold on Salisbury Plain following careful reintroduction. Roz Boot of Bishopstone claims to have seen an eagle locally, and she may be right because some sea eagles have been released onto the Isle of Wight and one male was spotted in Oxfordshire recently.

Tottenham House on the edge of Savernake forest, Marlborough, today languishes but it used to be the seat of the Earls of Cardigan and later Hawtrey’s prep school. Following our son Toby, who was at Pinewood playing Hawtreys I remember in the 1980’s a fine golden eagle mounted in the hall there which was described as the last eagle shot in the forest about 1880. Global warming has seen some Mediterranean birds move north so that the strikingly colourful hoopoe and the white egret can be seen in southern England.

So should we rewild our farms? In the national interest not on the good land please. Wilding will not feed us or help our nation’s food security. One has to say that the introduction of apex predators is hugely controversial. There could be a good case for wilding on marginal land with a double win if carbon capture brings, as seems likely, incentives for new forests and tree planting.

Why not rewild these areas as new National Parks with wide open spaces for wild life regeneration, associated perhaps with limited access? But without containment fencing as at Knepp there will be conflicts with boundary agriculture if semi-wild animals play their part in managing the new landscape and ecological development.
